Ask the Motor Medics®

Automotive Advice from The Under the Hood® Show

Dear Motor medics,
I have a 2013 Chevy Van and I keep getting moisture on the driver's side floor. I don't know where it's coming from. I thought if you could lead me in the right direction maybe it wouldn't be so costly. I read your column in the Vandalia leader from Vandalia Mo.

Thanks, Bert in Curryville Missouri

Dear Bert,
To find water leaks it takes some time, and here is one way we do it. Begin by mixing up some very sudsy dish soap in a water bucket. Next start the car and turn the blower to the vent position (Not A/C) and set the blower on high. Close all the windows and doors then pour the mixture around any spot that is joined together like window trim, door seals, bolts that are exposed, etc. If you see air bubbles coming out, then you know you have a leak. A few bubbles around door handles are normal but door seals are not. Once you find the leak it will have to be addressed according to where it is. These vehicles have come to us with leaking windshields and door seals as well. If your vehicle has a sunroof you will want to make sure the drains for the roof are clear of obstructions. The drains are located close to the front edge of the door and on the rear edge of the doors and run from the roof to under the car.

Take care, the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,
I am ready to purchase a set of new tires for my all-wheel drive car and have thought about purchasing two sets, one for winter and one for summer. I live in an area that does not see a huge snowfall amount each year, but we can get our share of slippery roads and ice. What should I be looking for if I go this route and are there any things you would suggest?

Thank you, Kate in Oklahoma City

Dear Kate,
On an all-wheel drive car a good set of all-season tires perform very well but many people like yourself want the very best traction they can get so they go with a second set of tires. This requires one of two things, either removing and remounting and balancing the tires every season or a second set of wheels. Both ways have their pros and cons, but we prefer a second set of wheels for the ease of changing and less chance of damage to a tire. There is a one-time cost involved in the wheels though, but sometimes less expensive alternatives can be found for the winter months. You may even go with some fancy aftermarket units for summer. For driving on ice and snow many manufactures offer a specialized tire that is purpose made and is best used just in the winter months as they wear faster on dry pavement. Ask your tire dealer which is best for you.

Take care, the Motor Medics
