Ask the Motor Medics®
Automotive Advice from The Under the Hood® Show

Dear Motor Medics,

I have a 2018 Chevy Malibu and every morning when I start it or if it sits for more than six hours it rattles so loudly that I am scared that something may come apart. I took it to a shop who said that I need new timing chains. The cost of the chains is around $2000. I asked why they failed, and they told me that it was likely due to lack of regular oil changes. I have always changed the engine oil very soon after the dash light comes on telling me to change it. What else could it be and will it happen again?

Thank you, Bob in Cloquet Minnesota.

Dear Bob,

Timing chain failure is very common in some cars and trucks. The chains wear and stretch and then they get very noisy. If they get too loose, they will jump teeth on the gears and cause the engine to be heavily damaged. The shop is also correct in their assessment that it could be from lack of regular oil changes. That dash light is far from perfect. As you have probably noticed, it can range greatly from a few thousand miles to five or six thousand, which is way too much. We have found that most vehicles that have common timing chain failures have a much lower failure rate when the oil is changed at three months or three thousand miles whichever occurs first. Once the chains are replaced try changing your lube routine and see.

Take care, the Motor Medics.

Dear Motor Medics,

We have two seasons in our area of the world, pothole season and pothole season. It seems like every time I drive, I hit at least one and I have had to make repairs to my car twice in the past two years due to damage caused by them. The last hit bent a front lower control arm and the one before that bent a wheel in the back. My son has now hit one with his car and the shop tells him it will cost over $4000 to repair it. It needs a front and rear strut on the passenger side and lower control arms and a rack and pinion. Once they fix it they will also need to align it. Is there any way to save some money on this?

Thank you, David in Ogden Utah.

Dear David,

There are things you can do to get this car back on the road. We would suggest checking into certified used parts. There are hundreds of self-service and full-service auto recycling yards across the country that supply parts. Using recycled parts can save you hundreds or thousands of dollars. Some people have a phobia about used parts but every car on the road is driving around with all its parts used as soon as it drives off the lot. Many have at least a one-year warranty too. Ask your shop about them.

Take care, the Motor Medics.
