Automotive Advice from The Under the Hood® Show

Dear Motor Medics,

Guys, my brakes are broken. I have a 2008 Ford F350 single wheel truck and I'm on my fourth set of brakes in four years. I put about 6k miles a year on this truck to pull my camper. I have been told I'm over pulling and that's why the brakes are wearing out, but my camper fully loaded as weighed on the scale is only 8k lbs. That's under what the truck is rated for. The same shop has been replacing the brake for me and they do all my other work. The truck I had before this was a 2000 and it never had brakes in 90k miles. What can cause this?

Thank you, Michael in Holland Michigan.

Dear Michael,

Take a close look at your receipt. What was done? A detail-oriented shop will write down what was done in detail at times like this. They should always know what they did before by looking at your description in case it comes back sooner than expected. If they have only replaced pads and rotors and have not replaced calipers or brake hoses and there is no description about cleaning and lubricating slides and making sure they are free, then there may lie the problem. If brake hoses are restricted it can cause a pull and premature wear. Same goes for sticking calipers or caliper slides. You should be able to get many more miles out of these brakes. Something is likely getting missed during the brake job. Ask your shop about these items.

Take care, the Motor Medics.

Dear Motor Medics,

I'm looking at getting a vehicle with 4-wheel drive. I moved here from California and have never driven in snow. I don't know how to drive in it and want to make sure I have the best vehicle possible for the snow. I am looking at either a Subaru or a Jeep Cherokee but there are so many choices of four-wheel drive type I am confused. What's the difference between Four-Wheel Drive and All-Wheel Drive, and does it matter? You guys are the best. I listened to your show in California for ten years before moving here.

Thank you, Regan on Montevideo Minnesota.

Dear Regan,

Step one, a four-wheel drive car does not make you a better driver. This is important to remember as you will see during winter people get a false sense of security when speeding down the road in a four-wheel drive. Those are usually the same people who are crashed into the median or down on the ditch. However, once they are stuck, they have a much better chance of getting unstuck on their own. Four-wheel drive is for getting moving by way of better traction not for stopping. Four-wheel drive can be shut off and all wheel is mostly automatic but some four wheel is too. Time for some research on your own as it would take a long time to describe them both.

Take care, the Motor Medics.
